Education Visits & Learning Beyond the Classroom: Statement of Principles

This document is informed by:

These principles are not definitive and should not be taken as an authoritative interpretation of the law. However, they do conform to the legal framework set out in the booklet, Safety in Outdoor Education (1989) (DfEE), the DfEE Circular 22/94 Safety in Outdoor Activity Centres and the booklet Health and Safety of Pupils On Educational Visits 1998. The Health and Safety at Work Act 1974 and the Management of Health and Safety at Work Regulations 1992, have also been considered in formulating these principles and supporting policies at local, academy level.

Build-a-Future (BAF) is committed to incorporating educational visits and visitors into its scheme of work, providing that they will enhance pupils' relevant understanding and experiences, and that their inclusion is practicable, considering the constraints of staffing, cost and time. Visits help to develop a pupil's investigative skills and vocational experience. Longer visits in particular encourage greater independence.

Educational visits should be available to all of the learners concerned, and should be organised accordingly, with particular consideration being given, especially when selecting venues and organising transport, to any pupils who have some sensory impairment or physical handicap. Just as all other elements in course programmes, educational visits should have clear, relevant and achievable aims and objectives which should be communicated clearly in the trip application.

A major consideration in the organisation of any visit must be the safety of the participants, and in this, as in all other respects, both the Local Authority (LA), guidelines and appropriate BAF policies must be complied with. The minimum adult-to-pupil ratio is dependent on the nature of the visit and the age of the pupils - staff must therefore check that they comply with all BAF and LA requirements and regulations. The organiser must be satisfied that the venue is a suitable one, with all that this entails, and, where applicable, that any officials from the venue who will be involved in the visit, are qualified and dependable.
